GLENDALÉ LAUNCHES MONSOON SAFETY WEB SITE AND TELEVISION SHOW

GLENDALÉ, Ariz. – While currently the skies may be clear and the forecast predicts sunny weather, according to the National Weather Service, Arizona officially welcomes the monsoon on Sunday, June 15 and Glendale residents have a new tool to help them prepare.

This Sunday, the city of Glendale launches a new Web site, Glendale Monsoon Ready. Here are samples of what can be found on the Glendale Monsoon Ready site:

- What is a monsoon?
- Preparing a family disaster plan
- Free sand and sand bag information for flooding
- Driving safety tips and information about Arizona's "Stupid Motorist Law"
- Emergency numbers for Glendale Police and Fire and local power companies

Glendale 11, the city's television station, will also begin broadcasting a 30-minute monsoon preparedness program on Tuesday, June 17 at 6:30 p.m. The show gives residents important information about monsoon storms, including tracking technology, safety tips and important resources for storm season emergencies. The show features Glendale fire and police chiefs and Glendale 11's Julie Watters.
